Insurance costs to rise 8 percent

By NIA BROOKINS

STAFF WRITER

TCU full-time employees should expect to see the cost of insurance benefits rise about 8 percent next year.

Michelle Whiteley, the director of benefits for human resources, talked about the changes earlier this month at a staff assembly meeting.

"The cost of medical care continues to go up year after year," Whiteley said.

Last year, employee contributions rose 12 percent. Whiteley attributed that increase to new advances in technology and new medications arising in the medical field.

Whiteley told staff assembly members at the meeting earlier this month that 2017 benefits enrollment for full-time faculty and staff members opens Monday.

It is mandatory that every full-time employee re-elects his or her benefit enrollment because benefits will not automatically rollover into the next year.

Whiteley said TCU is increasing its contributions to health savings accounts for employees enrolled in the high deductible health plan. TCU will double the contribution to the individuals to $1,000, and families will receive $1,500, up from $1,000 this year.

"That's huge," Whiteley said. "This seed money along with what you're able to contribute can help you offset those immediate out-of-pocket costs."

Whiteley said TCU will be changing its life insurance carrier from Mutual of Omaha to Unum due to a better overall price and increased coverage.

Under the new Unum plan, employees can have up to $1 million maximum coverage for the basic plan and an additional $800,000 for the supplemental plan. Life insurance will be a part of the online enrollment system this year for the first time.

"There are some serious pros to switching to Unum, and they happened to have the best pricing," Whiteley said.

The prescription plan will also be seeing changes. In the past, there were two options: the basic and buy-up plans. These two will be merged and there will be one option for all employees with medical insurance.

"There's a flat $10 co-pay," Whiteley said. "If the cost of the actual [prescription] is less than $10, you pay that."

Human Resources plans to publish tutorial videos and hold sessions for employees to help with benefits enrollment.

Big 12 Conference decides against expansion

By KACEY BOWEN

MANAGING EDITOR FOR TCU 360

The Big 12 is sticking with 10.

The league's presidents and chancellors met Monday in Dallas and ultimately decided now is not the time to expand.

The decision to stay was unanimous, said David Boren, president of the University of Oklahoma and chair of the Big 12 Board of Directors.

"Right now it's the best for us to stay where we are," Boren said.

There has been talk of expanding the Big 12, which includes TCU, since its teams were shut out of the college football playoff in 2014. Rather than add teams, however, the league decided to move ahead with plans to strengthen the conference from within.

Big 12 Conference Commissioner Bob Bowlsby said the decision to not expand was about the conference itself and not about the other teams.

"This was endorsing and reinstatement of the 10 we have," Bowlsby said.

Boren said the Big 12 takes pride in their national successes and shouldn't feel the need to expand for expansion sake.

The 11 candidates being considered were: Air Force, BYU, Central Florida, Cincinnati, Colorado State, Connecticut, Houston, Rice, South Florida, SMU and Tulane.

Boren said they feel deep gratitude towards the universities that showed interest, because each one is a quality school. By them showing a desire to join, it shows how strong the conference is, Boren said.

"It's a sign of strength for the conference that so many universities wanted to get involved," he said.

The board discussed the championship game, which will be reinstated at the end of the 2017 regular season, and talks of a Big 12 network.

The Big 12 conference is about winning national championships, Bowlsby said. Competing at the highest level and with the highest competition is what teams are good at, he added.

"We're glad we decided on the championship game," Bowlsby said. "It'll give us an extra opportunity."

Even though fans might not be pleased with the decision to not expand, Boren said that right now teams in the Big 12 are "committed to each other, committed to the Big 12 and committed to staying in the Big 12."

TCU to establish cabinet-level diversity position at the request of students

By KACEY BOWEN

MANAGING EDITOR FOR TCU 360

TCU is establishing a cabinet-level position regarding diversity and inclusion in response to student concerns.

Chancellor Victor Boschini sent out a campuswide email Tuesday outlining actions he said "are achievable in the short-term."

On Friday, senior political science majors Diona Willis and Shanel Alexander as well as senior journalism major and managing editor for TCU 360, Emily Laff, met with the chancellor and other university officials with a 14-point plan.

Of the 14 demands, three of the major concerns include the establishment of a $100 million endowment to support minority students with scholarships, to increase faculty of color by at least 10 percent and to hire a cabinet-level diversity officer.

In response to the concerns, Boschini is implementing the following:

In addition to the cabinet-level position, Boschini said the university will provide more sensitivity training campuswide so that people "may better partner with us to effect cultural change" on campus.

The university wants

"Our university community is imperfect, but I have not experienced another that cares for its members like TCU. We have work to do."

VICTOR BOSCHINI
CHANCELLOR

to find additional ways to support students, faculty and staff of color through "some of the conflict happening in our country."

To "actively recruit" a more diverse university community.

Will ask the Diversity Commission to establish a

Bias Response Team.

And ask faculty to review curricula that would "engage students in the scholarship of diversity and inclusion."

Students react to upcoming Market Square renovations

By COLE POLLEY

STAFF WRITER

TCU Dining Services told SGA in September that they are planning to completely overhaul and renovate Market Square as soon as summer 2017.

The renovations, which will be scheduled with many factors in mind including other campus construction, will aim to address issues that students are currently experiencing in Market Square, such as long lines and limited space during busy times.

Although there are some problems with the current food service in Market Square, students acknowledge that it's not all bad.

"Lunch and breakfast are good at the BLUU (referring to Market Square)," sophomore Curtis Hansen said. "It's convenient to be able to get as much food as I want pretty much whenever I want."

Students have also enjoyed improvements this fall such as new plates, fresh options for meals, and a "Sunday Brunch" that is offered each Sunday.

"Food on Sundays this year is a lot better than it was last year," Hansen said.

"I like the variety of desserts they provide," sophomore Michala Rodriguez said. "The people are really friendly every time I go in there...there are always people trying to help and put new things out."

Nonetheless, students are still looking forward to the impending changes.

"I feel like they could put more space where the lines are because when lines are long you can't move around," Rodriguez said. "You can't walk around to get to other lines because it's so congested."

Aside from minimal space, another aspect of Market Square that could be improved upon is food waste management. According to Michael Dahl, General Manager of Dining Services, about one fourth of each pound of food that is cooked in Market Square goes to waste.

Currently TCU Dining Services has no way to quantify the waste in an exact manner and the primary method used to prevent waste is cooking based on crowd populations.

LEAPS, Reading Frogs volunteer at Paschal High School

By MEG HEMMERLE

STAFF WRITER

TCU football's bye week gave students the perfect opportunity to volunteer in the Fort Worth community.

Sixty-five TCU students filled the two gyms at Paschal High School Saturday morning to read to kids from the Fort Worth Independent School District's elementary schools.

LEAPS hosted Reading Frogs, which consisted of reading books and writing inspirational letters to young kids, as a part of TCU's day of service. The event is usually held on TCU's campus, but this year it was at Paschal High School so that students from Paschal could volunteer as well.

Kaitlin Rayburne, a sophomore at TCU, wanted to participate in Reading Frogs because she wanted to help the community where she grew up.

"I went to Paschal High School and knew Drew Medford personally so I wanted to come here in honor of him and help out the community since I'm an alumna," said Rayburne.

Medford, a TCU baseball commit as a pitcher, died this summer in a car accident.

"I'm also the oldest in my family so I grew up reading to my younger siblings and I want to be a pediatrician so for me just hanging out with the kids is fun," Rayburne said.

Everyone read the same book, Bill Peet: An Autobiography. Peet was a writer and illustrator for Disney, and his autobiography is made up of the different stories he helped create. Tori Miller, a junior at TCU, said she was most looking forward to reading her favorite story, Peter Pan, with the kids.

TCU students used the football bye week to volunteer at Paschal High School.

The volunteers were given Sharpies so the kids could personalize the books and take them home at the end of the day. The personal connection the volunteers make with the kids is what influenced sophomore Dyllynne Dodson to volunteer.

"When LEAPS said we're hanging out and reading with kids and then we're gonna write inspirational notes with them, I was just really excited to do both and wanted to be a part of it," said Dodson.

SPORTS ROUND-UP

Volleyball, soccer faced tough challenges

By KACEY BOWEN

MANAGING EDITOR FOR TCU 360

While football had a bye this weekend, plenty of Horned Frog teams were in action. Here's the roundup:

Volleyball

TCU volleyball fell to No. 6 Kansas on Saturday night.

Even in front of a sellout crowd, the Frogs struggled to get the momentum going. The Jayhawks held the Frogs to their lowest hitting percentage of the season and defeated them 3-0.

This game was the largest crowd so far of the 2016 season with 1,808 fans in attendance.

Director of volleyball Jill Kramer said even with the crowd, it took a while for the team to start executing their game plan.

"We just had a really tough time getting into a rhythm," Kramer said. "They stuck in there with us and they had our backs and we love that. In the first set, we weren't really on our game plan that well. We have to get on that quicker. We were also in a little bit different of a lineup tonight and you could see that it affected some of our offensive rhythms."

Natalie Gower was the leading effort for the Frogs. She led the team offensively with 7 kills and defensively at the net along with Anna Walsh, as both had three blocks.

With the loss, TCU is now 10-7 overall this season and 3-4 against conference opponents.

TCU will wrap-up the first half of Big 12 play as they travel to take on No. 4 Texas on Wednesday. First serve is set for 7 p.m.

Soccer

TCU soccer lost two games this weekend.

TCU took on Baylor on Friday and with both teams trading opportunities to score, it was Baylor who came out victorious.

Baylor sped up the tempo late in the second half and in the 61st minute, Raegan Padgett ran down the sideline and took the shot, giving the Bears a 1-0 lead. Ten minutes later, they tacked on another goal, making it 2-0.

TCU didn't go quietly, however. Faith Carter capitalized with 30 seconds left to play and put one on the scoreboard for the Frogs.

On Sunday, TCU found themselves unable to fully capitalize again.

When the Frogs took on the Oklahoma State Cowgirls, they found

TCU controlled much of the gameplay in the second half, outshooting Oklahoma State 9-2, but couldn't find a goal.

With less than two minutes left in the match, OSU was awarded a penalty kick and Courtney Dike converted the kick for the final score.

This was the third time this season

TCU has been shutout.

TCU will wrap up their regular season with a three-game homestand. The homestand opens Friday night as the Frogs host No. 1 West Virginia. Game time is set for 7 p.m. at Garvey-Rosenthal.

TCU may have reinforcements coming back against West Virginia

By GARRETT PODDELL

STAFF WRITER

A few key players could return to action Saturday when the Frogs travel to Morgantown, West Virginia, to play the No. 12, undefeated Mountaineers.

"We may get center Austin Schlottman, wide receiver/returner [KaVontae] Turpin back, but they'll be game-time decisions," TCU head coach Gary Patterson said.

Offensive lineman Trey Elliott could be back after missing the first six games of the season with what was once-thought to be a season-ending injury.

Their absence has made a noticeable difference on the Horned Frog offense.

"I think offensively, they've lost a little swagger because of the loss of Turpin, and the loss of your best offensive lineman [Schlottmann]," Patterson said. "So we need to get those guys back."

TCU may also get some returning help in the defensive backfield as well.

"There's a possibility of cornerback

SAM BRUTON / TCU STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Gary Patterson and the TCU Horned Frogs will face the West Virginia Mountaineers Saturday.

Julius Lewis being back for this ballgame, which would be a big help," Patterson said.

Lewis played in all 12 games last season, starting four including the Valero Alamo Bowl.

Patterson said "there's no in between" with West Virginia quarterback Skyler Howard and that he always "goes all-in" running and throwing the football.

Howard, a Fort Worth native who played for Brewer High School, has passed for 1,590 yards and eight touchdowns with a 66.1 percent completion rate. He's also rushed 44 times for 195 yards and three touchdowns.

The Mountaineers are also strong at their wide receiver and running back positions.

Running back Justin Crawford, No. 25, averages 74.6 rushing yards per game and 5.57 yards per carry. Wide receiver Shelton Gibson is ranked No. 13 nationally in all-purpose yards, No. 14 in yards per catch, and No. 19 in yards per game.

"I think [WVU head coach] Dana Holgorsen really emphasizes the run game, while also going up-tempo with his spread offense," Patterson said.

Defensively, TCU has changed their outlook.

"I've given up yardage to make sure we get back to playing base defense, and we need to generate more takeaways," Patterson said.

TCU's bye week also allowed for some key defensive players to regain their health.

"Defensive end Josh Carraway has been playing at 80 percent because of an ankle injury, but he'll be at full strength, as well as defensive tackle Aaron Curry," Patterson said.

TCU is 3-2 against the Mountaineers since joining the Big 12 with West Virginia in 2012. The tenacity in the two teams has led games to be decided on the final play and two in overtime. TCU is 2-0 in Morgantown.

"We've always barely got out of there and had to come from behind to win," Patterson said. "We have to be able to carry our own energy into someone else's stadium."

TCU kicks off in Morgantown against the Mountaineers at 2:30 p.m.
